Introduction:

Research method is one of the crucial components of research that steers the students to pose styles of inquiry across disciplines. It provides skill sets to researchers to measure, reflect and introspect. As a mandate of CPEPA, one of the key areas for future intervention is to initiate capacity building programme for the research scholars and young faculty in the field of communication studies and social sciences. The present workshop has the responsibility of training the young and curious minds towards producing a high quality research work having applicability beyond the research settings. Broadly, the objectives set forth for this workshop is two-fold: Firstly, the workshop is intended to enhance the capabilities of research scholars to critically engage in research activities such as identifying a problem, formulating research questions, reviewing the existing literature, setting the research design, and so on. Secondly, participants will be acquainted with the ways through which different methods/techniques can be used in conducting research with hence on exercises.
