Research Interests/ Areas of Work/ Teaching

My areas of research interest include Oral/ Folk and Tribal Literature, Narratives from the Margins, Christian Writings and Women's Writings. My M. Phil research work was on select mainstream Indian writers who wrote on the Indian tribes while my PhD research work was on the religious narratives of select Indian women who converted to Christianity in the colonial period. I have taught English Literature to UG students in a government college of Puducherry, South India, and also taught Technical English and General Proficiency to B. Tech students in an engineering college in Puducherry, South India. In Jamia Millia Islamia, I have been teaching both English Literature and English Language Skills to UG, PG and M. Phil students.

I am also a translator from Santhali and Hindi into English. I am a poet with one published poetry collection, The Golden Chord (Writers Workshop, Kolkata: 2010). Finally, I have been editing an biannual online journal titled The Johar Journal (<https://joharjournal.org/>) on tribal and indigenous issues, with focus on tribal literatures in translation. The first issue was launched in July 2020 while the second issue is forthcoming.
